

Conducting interviews and selection of applicants

Seminar objective

Whoever hires a new employee today is making a long-term investment decision. Only those who have mastered interview techniques and know how to address the applicant in the right way are in a position to conduct interviews successfully and to select the right applicants for the long term.

Seminar content

Recruitment as a competitive factor for your company:

- Analysis of application documents: selection on the basis of the requirement profile.
- References and curriculum vitae: What do references say and how do you discover gaps in the resume?
- Preliminary telephone interview: When does an invitation to a job interview make sense?

The job interview:

- What preparations should be made before the job interview?
- How do you set up a job interview?
- Questioning techniques: How do you address the applicant?
- What to ask applicants and what not to ask them?

The right behavior of the interviewer:

- How to cope with difficult applicants?
- How to recognize the truth of a statement?
- Interview termination
- Decision making and contract conclusion
- Presentation of common assessment errors ("interviewer bias") and tips on how to avoid them
